Marine Corps' top dog promoted to private first class

By Irene Loewenson
Military.com

It's not often that the secretary of the Navy speaks at the promotion ceremony of a Marine who is picking up the rank of private first class. Then again, Pfc. Chesty XVI is not just any Marine.

Secretary of the Navy Carlos Del Toro personally changed the Marine Corps mascot and English bulldog into a dress-blue-Charlies-style onesie bearing an E-2 chevron at a ceremony held at Marine Barracks Washington on Tuesday. The promotion was well earned, according to Del Toro.

"Since you relieved your predecessor, you've amassed a nearly spotless record," Del Toro said. "Literally. No spots on the rug, no sword biting, no assaults on your superiors and no barking in silent drill."

Pfc. Chesty XVI enlisted in the Marine Corps in February and relieved Lance Cpl. Chesty XV of his duties in May. Lance Cpl. Chesty XV was reportedly a handful, so much so that Del Toro had to give the bulldog an official pardon at his retirement ceremony.

cot for the Marines in Washington D.C., got a special pardon at his retirement ceremony.

In contrast, his successor has mostly obeyed official orders to sit at a majority of the summer's parades, according to Col. Robert A. Sucher, commanding officer of Marine Barracks Washington. Unlike Chesty XV, Chesty XVI also hasn't attacked any Marines' scabbards or tried to jump on guests at parades, said Cpl. Jesus A. Moras, handler to both mascots.

In a nod to the Marine moniker "Devil Dog," the Corps has had an English bulldog as its official mascot for a century. The first, Jiggs, enlisted as a private in 1922 and rocketed to the rank of sergeant major in less than two years.

Since 1957, the mascots have borne the name Chesty in honor of legendary Marine Lt. Gen. Lewis "Chesty" Puller.

Still a puppy, Chesty XVI wears two medals on his uniform: the National Defense Service Medal and the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal.

Moras confirmed to Marine Corps Times that the private first class, in addition to being a good Marine, is a very good boy. In his off-duty moments, Pfc. Chesty XVI likes to walk around the barracks, according to Moras.

"For myself and the other Marines around here, sometimes you're having a bad day and you see Chesty walking around and it cheers you up, especially being away from family and away from home," Moras said.

When Marine Corps Times offered Chesty XVI the chance to comment on his promotion, he remained doggedly silent.

New boot design and NWU fleece wear rules announced in extensive uniform update

By MC1 Mark D. Faram
Chief of Naval Personnel public affairs

A new boot option for Sailors is expected to be available in Navy Exchange Uniform Shops as soon as January, according to an extensive uniform update released in NAVADMIN 285/22. The update also announces seven uniform policy improvements while introducing details of five additional uniform initiatives now underway.

The update also announces seven uniform policy improvements while introducing details of five additional uniform initiatives now underway.

"The following uniform and grooming policy updates are intended to reduce out-of-pocket expenses, simplify sea bag requirements, and to announce design changes of uniform components and breast insignia," Vice Adm. Richard J. Cheeseman, the chief of naval personnel, wrote in the message.

Here's a look at the highlights:

I-Boot 5

The Navy's latest in working uniform footwear, in development for the past four years, became operational Oct. 1 when issue started at Recruit Training Command in Great Lakes, Ill.

The I-Boot 5 is a lightweight safety boot with a full inner lining and steel toes. Its smooth outer leather uppers will be available in either black or brown.

Wearing the boot is approved for nearly every Navy environment, including flight decks at all commands afloat and ashore.

Six aviators earn 'Wings of Gold' in December pinning ceremony

There was a naval aviator designation ceremony Dec. 16 onboard Naval Air Station Meridian.

Six aviators received their "Wings of Gold" during the ceremony. The naval aviator designation ceremony is not prescribed specifically by U.S. Navy regulations, but has emerged as an honored product of the rich heritage of naval tradition. It marks the culmination of nearly two years of specialized training, which has prepared these officers for the rigorous demands of aerial combat and carrier operations -- earning each the title of "Naval Aviator" and the right to wear the coveted "Wings of Gold."

CDR Michael Saylor, left, an instructor pilot with Training Squadron 7, is pictured with CDR Jamie Epps, following Saylor's final flight on Dec. 12. Saylor will soon retire after 27 years of U.S. Naval service. Saylor enlisted in the Navy on Dec. 28, 1995. He met his lifelong friend, CDR Jamie Epps, on their first deployment as enlisted Sailors aboard the USS Yorktown -- Saylor, an Electronics Technician and Epps, a Fire Controlman. The two later became Naval aviators and are currently stationed together here at NAS Meridian where Epps serves as the executive officer. What a more fitting person to accompany Saylor on his last flight than CDR Epps -- the person he has known since the beginning of his Naval career.

US Naval Community College selects Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University for aviation maintenance technology program

The U.S. Naval Community College selected Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University as the Pilot II aviation maintenance technology associate degree program November 30, 2022.

"This program will take our Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen to new heights in naval-relevant education," said USNCC's President Randi R. Cosentino, Ed.D. "We are excited to support the Naval Aviation Enterprise's promise to fly, fight, lead, and win. This degree program will provide our naval aviation maintainers the education that helps our naval forces maintain the competitive advantage over our adversaries."

Naval professionals who pursue the Associate of Science in Aviation Maintenance Technology through USNCC will have an opportunity to gain an in-depth understanding of general aeronautics and applications, airframe structures, reciprocating engine theory, turbine engine theory, and more. The six aviation maintenance courses taken as part of the degree program can be used to prepare students for the Federal Aviation Administration airframe and powerplant certification testing process.

Aviation Maintenance Technology degree program graduates become eligible to apply for the Aviation Maintenance Technology Part 65 Certification. The degree will also have an established transfer path to a Bachelor of Science in Aviation Maintenance or a Bachelor of Science in Aeronautics through ERAU.

"Our longstanding relationship with the military, providing exceptional instruction to service men and women around the globe, is a point of pride for our institution," said John Waltret, Ph.D., chancellor for Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University Worldwide Campus. "We are extremely eager to begin this new partnership with USNCC to develop aviation maintenance talent for the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard."

Vice CNO visits Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard

Adm. Lisa Franchetti, Vice Chief of Naval Operations, visited Pearl Harbor Naval Shipyard and Intermediate Maintenance Facility (PHNSY & IMF) Dec. 14, 2022, to assess progress on implementing the Navy's Shipyard Infrastructure Optimization Program (SIOP) and conduct a review of ongoing ship maintenance availabilities.

During her visit, Franchetti met with PHNSY & IMF leadership for operational briefings and toured the shipyard's dry dock areas that will be modernized beginning in 2023. The first modernization action proposes to construct and operate a new graving dry dock and waterfront production facility to support current and future classes of the nation's nuclear-powered submarines.

After carefully weighing the strategic, operational, and environmental consequences of the proposed action, the Navy announced its decision December 16, 2022 to select Alternative 4 from the Final Environmental Impact Statement (<https://www.PearlHarborDryDockEIS.org>) for PHNSY & IMF.

Future USS Jack H. Lucas embarks on first sea trials

The Navy's first Flight III Arleigh Burke-class guided missile destroyer, future USS Jack H. Lucas (DDG 125) completed Builder's Trials on Dec 15, 2022.

Builder's trials consist of a series of in-port and at-sea demonstrations that allow the shipbuilder to assess the ship's systems. For DDG 125, these trials also mark the first opportunity to test the new Flight III systems while underway. The trials are conducted by the shipbuilder, Huntington Ingalls Industries' (HII) Ingalls Shipbuilding division in Pascagoula, Mississippi.

"Embarking on Builder's Sea Trials is a significant accomplishment for the DDG 51 program," said Capt. Seth Miller, DDG 51 class program manager, Program Executive Office (PEO) Ships. "As the first Flight III ship, DDG 125 is the culmination of years of dedication and perseverance to design, build, and integrate the Flight III capability of BL 10, AMDR and the supporting systems such as the new Electric Plant and associated upgrade to the Machinery Control System."

The future USS Jack H. Lucas will be the 75th Arleigh Burke (DDG 51) class destroyer, and the first of the DDG 51 Flight III ships.

Black female Marine General is latest in year of firsts for military women and minorities

By Konstantin Toropin
Military News

The Marine Corps now has a Black female two-star general -- a historic first for the branch and another major achievement for women and minorities in the military this year.

Maj. Gen. Lorna Mahlock was confirmed for promotion by the Senate on Dec. 15 after President Joe Biden nominated Mahlock earlier this month. She currently serves at the National Security Agency as the deputy director of cybersecurity for combat support.

Mahlock's confirmation caps off a notable year as the higher reaches of the services become more open and diverse. Women have taken command of units for the first time and made advances in aviation and submarining in 2022, while the Marine Corps promoted the highest-ranking Black officer in its history.

Rob Joyce, the NSA's director of cybersecurity, hailed Mahlock's promotion, calling the Marine "an awesome leader" and a "great partner" in a tweet recently.

This is also not the first time Mahlock has made history. In 2018, she became the first Black woman in the Corps to achieve the one-star rank of brigadier general, and she was the first woman to serve as the Marine Corps' chief information officer.

Mahlock's career with the Marines began just months after she arrived in the U.S. from Jamaica in 1985 as a 17-year-old, according to a biography from her alma mater, Marquette University. Mahlock went from being an enlist-Mahlock speaks to troops in the North Mariana Islands. She was the first African American woman to achieve the rank of Brigadier General, and now has been selected for Major General -- another first.

ed Marine to an officer specializing in air traffic control in 1991.

According to an undated post from the Women Marines Association, Mahlock's awards include the Legion of Merit, Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal and Joint Service Commendation Medal, among others.

It's been a notable year for similar achievements.

In August, Capt. Amy Bauernschmidt became the first female commanding officer to complete the deployment of a U.S. aircraft carrier when the USS Abraham Lincoln returned to Naval Air Station North Island after a seven-month deployment in the Pacific.

Other female sailors also achieved firsts. In July, Lt. Amanda Lee became the first female jet pilot to join the historic demonstration squadron "The Blue Angels."

In August, the Navy announced that it had selected its first woman to serve as the top enlisted sailor on a submarine. Master Chief Information Systems Technician (Submarine) Angela Koogler joined the USS Louisiana as its chief of the boat.

The same month that Bauernschmidt was returning from the Pacific, Gen. Michael Langley became the first Black Marine officer to achieve the top four-star rank of general.

His promotion meant that the Corps -- which is 247 years old -- was no longer one of the only branches without a Black service member to reach its highest rank. The newly formed Space Force, which is only two years old, has not yet promoted a Black Guardian into a top-level position.

Capt. Kelsey Hastings became the first female member and commander of the historic Marine Corps Silent Drill Platoon in November.

Christmas with the crud

This holiday season, I've done everything differently. COLUMN
Due to a nasty respiratory infection that has been terrorizing my lungs and sinuses for nearly a month, our family's time-honored Christmas traditions have been replaced with alternative holiday rituals.

Molinari

Normally, I would fill bowls with festive red and green M&Ms and place them throughout the house, enticing our family members with this special holiday treat. Instead, I've adorned our house with sticky bottles of cherry flavored Robitussin DM and Kleenex tissues sopping with verdant snot. In lieu of singing Christmas carols, I've been uttering deep, raspy vocalizations that would give "Exorcist" demon Pazuzu a run for his money.

Rather than put on my grandmother's red beaded necklace for a pop of holiday color, I'm wearing two deep circles around my eyes so dark, I look like I was hit by an Amazon delivery truck. Instead of hitting the stores for Christmas presents lovingly picked for loved ones, I've done all my shopping slumped over a laptop, ordering thoughtless gift cards with messages that say "Merry Christmas!" but really mean "Go out and buy your own damned gift this year, sucker."

In lieu of watching my favorite Christmas movies while I trim a freshly cut tree, I dragged a fake tree from the basement and plugged it in before collapsing onto the couch, where I fell asleep with my mouth open while watching a crime documentary about serial killers. I would have plugged in one of my vintage ceramic Christmas trees to light up my bedroom, but this year the outlet beside my bed supplies electricity to a cool mist humidifier intended to liquify mucus. Rather than dreaming of dancing sugar plums, I've been sleeping with my head elevated to facilitate sinus drainage, waking periodically when my lungs seize up with a sudden coughing jag.

Instead of ringing Christmas bells, I'm ringing up the Naval Health Clinic at the crack of 7:30 am to beg for a follow up appointment with my PCM because I still feel like crap after a full course of Prednisone. Instead of writing holiday cards for friends and family far and wide, I'm using my pen to complete sudoku puzzles while I wait in the base pharmacy for my prescriptions to be filled. Rather than nibbling nostalgic Christmas cookies, I've been trying to choke down Augmentin horse pills needed to kill the bacteria that conveniently infected my sinuses two weeks after a respiratory virus invaded my lungs.

Instead of celebrating Christmas like I always have with my family and our annual traditions, I've been too sick and tired to deal with it all.

The only comfort in this most unfortunate holiday has been that I am not alone. Misery loves company as they say, and this holiday season, many people have been miserably sick like me. Hospitals all over the United States have been swamped with patients complaining of respiratory symptoms of coronavirus, flu virus, or respiratory syncytial virus (RSV). In early December, the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) warned us to mask up again, not necessarily for Covid-19, but to guard against a possible "triple-demic" surge of the three viruses which could overwhelm our understaffed healthcare system.

The CDC also urged the public to get flu shots, get the latest Covid-19 booster, wash hands, social distance, take rapid tests, yaddada, yaddada, yaddada. Ironically, experts link this year's explosion in flu and RSV cases to people's vulnerable immune systems after two years of masking and minimizing exposure to viruses.

I was signed up to get my flu shot and Covid bivalent booster on December 5th at my local military health clinic. However, our clinic's Covid-19 policy wouldn't permit anyone in the facility with cough, runny nose or fever, so I had to cancel my immunizations despite the fact that I'd tested negative for Covid.

So let me get this straight... I can't get boosted for Covid because I have RSV symptoms, and I have RSV symptoms because I've been protecting myself from Covid?

Just like the holidays, I'm too sick and tired to sort it all out. Instead, I'll wish you all a Mucusy Crustmas ... er, I mean, a Merry Christmas!
